

CREATIVE SOLUTION

A simple idea that mimics the existing advertising techniques used by popular vaping brands IGET and JUUL.

Out-Of-Home posters placed in and around potential usage locations such as pubs and clubs, festivals, schools, convenience stores and other point of sale sites.

The intention behind the idea is to attract the attention of the 14 to 25 year old audience who already vape but rather than trying to tell them to stop vaping, the concept encourages young people to think again about what they are inhaling.

With a small amount of text that lists some of the harmful chemicals that make up the ingredients of vaping liquids, the posters include a call to action pointing to a website with QR code (a play on words of Vape No More) that will provide more information about the harm these chemicals can cause.
